Crime in New York.

The New York press seems to have ample time for lecturing other communities on the prevalence of crime that exists, and it is especially severe upon the south upon what it is pleased to term laxity in repressing lawlessness. Taking the southern states throughout which are scattered more than 8,000,000 negroes most of whom are uneducated and who are only a few generations removed from that absolute barbarism that characterized their fathers in Africa and not one, for the same period of time, will show such a record of crime as is shown by the city of New York alone from August 1st to September 15th, 1904. It shows during this six weeks' period, 24 homicides, 252 burglaries, 68 robberies and 95 felonious assaults. With such a showing of crime, ask the Nashville Times, does it not come with bad grace for some of the leading newspapers of that city to so carefully and critically scan the mote in the eye of other communities when the is such loathsome beam protruding from their own optic?

Buy One Hearse.

Lippincott's: In the old days in Vermont many of the towns were without facilities for carrying their dead from their earthly habitations to the burying ground. Therefore the good people went from house to house soliciting contributions for the purchase of a town hearse. It was a difficult matter to raise the $40 or $50, but in the town of R. it was finally accomplished. At each recurring funeral different farmers loaned horses to draw the hearse.

In the course of time the old hearse came to the end of its labors, even as those when it had carried to the little burying ground had come to the end of their labors. The subscription committee made a second canvass of the town and visited an old farmer who had contributed toward the first hearse and laid before him the necessity of a second hearse. Old Graybeard regarded them narrowly and then said with determination:

"Me and my family ain't never had no use t'other hearse, and I don't calclerate ter pay out a dern cent more."
